The Hand of God at Work in Hawaii

She turned with her eyes full of tears and said to her beloved husband: "What indeed is this. You are truly abandoning our daughter in this uninhabited forest?"
Ululani mother of Kapi'olani

Some may know of the Christian faith of Princess Kapi'olani and her fearless repudiation of the goddess Pele at the mouth of Halema'umau'u' Fire Pit.

But, most don't know of her parents' flight from the battle of Moku 'Ohai and their heart rending decision to leave their wailing child in the forest wilderness of the Big Island.

God protected little Kapi'olani of course and she was taken by the pursuers to be carefully raised (recognizing her royal status by the lei palana her mother had placed around her neck) until she later returned to her parents home in Hilo.

This is but a small story in the long history of these islands and the people who lived here for centuries before western contact.

Hawaiians pursued a level of warfare and weapons training reminiscent of Sparta and as Captain Cook and other western sailing ships were arriving they found Hawaiians already locked in combat involving tens of thousand of warriors vying for the control of these islands.

The ultimate victor, Kamehameha the Great, was a man thoroughly involved in the ancient religious practices but was strikingly different in his attitude and personal conduct:

He had an innate sense of justice instituting protection of the common people by The Law of the Splintered Paddle.

Kamehameha's martial prowess was so fierce it terrorized western supporters who feared for their lives when he was drunk and were ready to leave the islands.

Wisely Kamehameha chose to moderate his own conduct and ceased drinking alcohol to the point of drunkenness.

By bringing all the islands under one ruler and being open to outside innovation Kamehameha (unwittingly) set the stage for the fall of the Kapu system. This prepared the way for the arrival of the missionaries barely 6 months later and the development of a Christian monarchy that preserved Hawaiian rule for nearly a century against aggressive imperial expansionists.

If God has so impacted Hawaiian history preparing the way for His Word to be preached among His island people and has in fact impacted world history by His divine hand of guidance in these lands, how much more can we logically expect Him to do further mighty works in these islands and in this generation.

Church
Fathers & the Mystery of John 6:53 -

Msgr. Frank Lane

A thoughtful dissertation of the Eucharist in church tradition. A subject that may well be beyond full human comprehension but wonderful (and important) to contemplate and promote dialog between believers.

Grayson's Testimony of Freedom

"This last time I managed to keep it a secret, and then I was caught. I remember telling my mom that this was "who I was" and "I wasn't going to change." (Those were declarations the enemy wanted me to profess). I ended up running away that night. I was living with different people in my city"
